Dear Colleagues,

I write in strong support of the Medical Students Aid Project.

I am continuously impressed by the selfless commitment of students in this Faculty towards the promotion of a better world for all global citizens. Our students have developed an innovative and creative program, which is self-sustaining. They have been developing support for medical equipment and supplies to be made available to institutions in the developing world. This is an important initiative that has been student conceived and directed. The program has strong support of this office, the Faculty and the University. Throughout the program, as it gains sustainability, sequential involvement of medical students over the years since inception in 2001 has been remarkable.

You may be assured that any contributions to the project are subjected to the usual audit processes, in the University of New South Wales Foundation and the disbursement of resources will be completely for the purposes for which they are intended.

I am delighted to nominate the Medical Students Aid Project (MSAP) as an important initiative borne out of the abiding commitment of these future young doctors to see a greater sense of equity prevail through out the world.

Your sincerely
